The short version

Children do not have accounts on Coderboy. No email address, no password, no login. The school or the parent holds the account; a child is a name on a class list. Nothing a child does creates a contactable identity.

What we store

| DATA               | WHY                              | WHO CAN SEE IT              |
|--------------------|----------------------------------|-----------------------------|
| Child's name       | To show whose progress is whose  | Their teacher, their parent |
| Lesson progress    | Completion and certificates      | Their teacher, their parent |
| Certificate record | So it can be verified later      | Public, name-limited        |
| Adult's email      | To sign the teacher or parent in | Coderboy only               |

What we do not store

- No addresses, phone numbers, dates of birth or photographs of children
- No child email addresses or passwords — they do not exist
- No behavioural profiling, no advertising, no third-party trackers on the learning pages
- We do not sell or share student data

Public certificate checks

Anyone holding a certificate number can confirm it is genuine. That page deliberately shows a first name and an initial only — for example "Ali H." — with the course, the date and the issuing school. A child's full name is never published.

Access control

- A teacher sees only students in classes they teach — not the whole school.
- A parent sees only their own children.
- Sign-in is a one-time six-digit code; there are no passwords to reuse or leak.
- A teacher can remove a student from a class but cannot delete a child's record or their certificate.

Deletion and consent

- Tell us and we delete a child's record and progress; issued certificates can be revoked.
- Consent is obtained by the school under its own policy, or by the parent. Coderboy never approaches a child directly.
- A data-processing agreement is available on request.

Honesty note. Lessons are delivered as embedded YouTube videos, so YouTube may set its own cookies when a video plays. We pass YouTube no information about the child.
